INTRODUCTION

Effective written communication has become a lost art in our country. Our founding statesmen could write books as young as early teen years. Simple, uneducated working men and women could easily read book that now cause difficulty to university students. This decline is due to reading material that has degenerated and writing courses or curriculums that downplay the importance of developing and practicing intellectual interaction with the knowledge one learns.

Computers, grammar checks, spell checks etc. are all very convenient. However they are contributing to the creation of a generation of functionally illiterate people in the area of written communication. The Write Thinking Series of workbooks is designed to 'turn the tide' and restore critical, reasoned thinking and quality communication skills.

Daily Digest is intended to be used Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Two pages per day of specifically designed questions aimed at instilling comprehension, integration and application skills. Tuesday's are set aside for letter or report writing and Thursday is for creative writing.

Reader's Review becomes a portfolio of all the literature read. Each completed work is evaluated and critiqued. There are enough section for 25 literary works and 25 historical works per workbook. The layout requires greater interaction and evaluation of the writings than a typical book report does.

Line Upon Line contains step by step instruction in the art of outlining. This workbook begins at the very basic level and proceeds in an orderly and easily understood pace to an intricate outline. The lessons are compared to the trees in a forest. With each level added, the student is brought closer to evaluating the very molecular structure of a part of a tree from the cursory look at the forest.

Truth Pursuits provides a notebook for daily devotions or bible study. The questions presented are generic as far as the portions of scripture they can be applied to. They are specific in the skill they aim to facilitate.
